

Eric C. Osterberg

Eric Osterberg is the founder of Osterberg LLC in Boston, MA. He specializes in intellectual property and federal court business litigation, and copyright and trademark licensing and counseling. Eric has litigated a wide range of cases in federal courts across the country on issues of concern to intellectual property owners and users including: international and domestic copyright infringement; patent and design patent infringement; trade secret disputes; trademark and trade dress infringement; breaches of IP licenses; counterfeiting and false advertising. He is an experienced negotiator of software licenses, music licenses, and other license agreements concerning intellectual property. He serves as “outside general counsel” to a number of startups and small businesses, helping them to address the full range of issues faced by new and expanding businesses. Eric is a frequent lecturer and has published numerous articles on intellectual property law. He is co-author of Substantial Similarity In Copyright Law, a treatise devoted to the analysis of the ways in which courts compare works in copyright infringement cases. He is part of the group that drafted the ABA model jury instructions for copyright infringement cases (published spring 2008). Eric’s speaking engagements include appearances before the Copyright Society of the U.S.A., Copyright Society of the South, Licensing Executives Society and Westchester/Fairfield County Chapter of the Association of Corporate Counsel.
